

Preci test: Money comes second for professional men

Professional men do not prioritise money above their profession. Although they like making money, but this is not their primary objective. For example, a dedicated soldier would prioritise winning battles over salary and a clergyman would focus over preaching rather than getting paid for it. Same is case with doctors. ~~A~~ Despite their quest for money, ~~the~~ saving lives and curing patients would still be the primary ~~concern~~ concern for majority of doctors. Thus, ~~all~~ all well-trained men will prioritise their work above money.
