

Q) Both Parents should assume equal responsibility in raising a child.

Outline:

1) Introduction

Thesis statement: Raising a child is a multifaceted process that entails efforts from both mother and father. However, given that the patriarchy have to shoulder the burden of making ^{the} ends meet, and are the sole bread winner of the family, in majority of cases, it is safe to assume that mothers share more responsibility in raising a child.

2) How assuming equal responsibility in raising a child, required by both Parents and how is it not

3) Raising a child is primarily the responsibility of mother

a) Father usually occupied with meeting financial requirements of the family

b) Women are better at providing emotional support.

c) Lack of Patience in Fathers

d) Primitive stereotype of patriarchy still prevails

e) Mostly labor intensive work available in global-south, more suitable for males.

4) Both parents should assume equal responsibility

a) No Parent should have to compromise on their careers.

b) Support of both mother and father is essential for healthy mental growth.

c) Shared financial responsibility can all the burden of the patriarchy.

- d) Patriarchal conformity is being increasingly challenged.
- e) More capital intensive work opportunities available in the wake of technological advancements.
- equal
- 5) Sharing responsibility remains a utopian concept.
- a) Child can get neglected if both parents are fixated with their careers.
- b) There are several successful individuals raised by single parent.
- c) Sharing financial responsibility can give birth to unintended consequences.
- d) Concept of patriarchal conformity still followed widely across Pakistan.
- e) Global South is way behind Global North in terms of technological advancement.

6) Conclusion