

PRECIS - 2000 : 'The Middle Class Dilemma'

- (-) The social augmentation of the middle class in the modern times is at a complete variance to how it was back in the 8th century. A blind eye was turned towards them in the urban settlements of the ancient ages. They were barred from societal cohesion amongst the locality. Their transition along the course of history had rendered them a strong belief in the importance of their own community. They were more concerned and careful of their own values and priorities, disregarding unethical behaviours and religious ignorance to establish order in the society.