Title:

Dealing childrens with love

The author asserts that modern educational theorists are more in favour of not intervening in children's sphere of freedom and less in favour of liking their presence. Childrens responds to the instructions depending on how they are treated. If they are loved unconditionally, then, they follow up teacher's instructions. But, if they are loved for some purpose then it becomes difficult for teachers to influence their behaviour. Developing spontaneous liking for students is difficult for tired teachers as they spend less hours with their students. Children become cantankerous when teachers take no interest in them. Using rules to control the behaviour of cantankerous children are useless as rules can not
