

Sub-heading: The climate crisis is neglected due to short-term economic interests.

The climate crisis is neglected due to short-term economic interest. The pursuit of immediate financial gains often takes precedence over long-term environmental sustainability. This can lead to decisions that favor resource extraction, pollution-intensive production, and deforestation, which results into worsening of climate crisis. Thus, Consequently, contributing to the climate crisis status as a neglected cause. For instance, according to the Inter-governmental Panel on Climate Crisis (IPCC), the major hurdle in addressing climate change is the short-term economic interests of countries. In sum, short-term economic interests perpetuate the cycle of climate crisis negligence.
