(i) Just as we came in sight of the valley Jamil met us,--“yes, the valley is all very fine, but do you know there is nothing to eat?”

“Nonsense; we can eat anything here.”

“Well, the brown bread’s two months old, and there’s nothing else but potatoes.”

“There must be milk anyhow.”

“Yes, there was milk”, he supposed.

(ii) Miss Andleeb said she thought English food was lovely, and that she was preparing a questionnaire to be circulated to the students of the university, with a view to finding out their eating preferences.

“But the students won’t fill up questionnaires,” said Miriam.

“Won’t fill up questionnaire?” cried Miss Andleeb, taken aback.

“No”, said Miriam, “they won’t. As a nation we are not, questionnaire-conscious.”

“Well, that’s too bad,” said Miss Andaleeb.

Just as we came in sight of the valley Jamil met us and said that the valley is extremely fine and asked if we know there was nothing to eat. But we rejected the idea as nonsensical and said we could eat anything there. He agreed and wamingly said that the brown bread was two months old and other than that was potatoes only. We inquired that there must was milk anyhow. Jameel replied doubtfully that there was milk.

Miss Andleeb said, "I think English food is lovely. I am preparing a questionnaire questionnaire to be circulated to the students of the university, with a view to find out their eating preferences."

Miriam rejected the idea and said the students would not fill a questionnaire. Miss andleeb suprisingly conformed whether the students would really not fill up their questionnaire. Meriam replied they would not and remarked as a nation we are not questionnaire conscious. Miss Andleeb sadly said that it was too bad.
