Title: Human life in Temperate an Equator Region

There is a clear impact of cold in temperate countries of Northern Europe. The cold temperature provides an impetus for exerting energy by functioning as an obstacle. Intense cold can paralyse human energies while in moderate cold, man has to struggle to survive the climate. Contrarily, people living in equator need not warm cloths and fire because mild temperature that is fit to lead a comfortable life. One has to prepare accordingly to climate as in hot weather there is no effort requires, while cold weather entails energy and effort of mind and body.
