English Paragraph

≡ Should State institutions be subject to public criticism?

As employees working private institutions are accountable for their actions and decision, state institution should be accountable to public. Public has right to criticize state institutions if their performance is unsatisfactory or if they are practicing power out of their domain. However, one needs to make sure that criticism should base on truth. If such criticism has hidden agenda that can be political or strategic, then state institutions should act against their master planners. PDM, recently, did a protest in front of Supreme Court, saying that it is supporting Imran Khan. However, this protest and criticism over Supreme Court was just a pressure tactic to pressurize state institute to go act against Imran Khan. Therefore, one can criticize state institution only if one's agenda behind this is genuine based on truth. This will allow institutions to improve their positive role.
