

If Gold Rusts, What Shall Iron do?

Outline

1. Introduction

Thesis Statement: If the top-brass of any organization indulges in malpractices then laymen will follow suit; however, accountability of the top-brass can help to curb the predicament.

2. Interpretation of "If Gold Rusts, What Shall Iron do?"

- a. International organization's² role in policy making is biased, so other organizations at Regional and national level follow them.
- b. Involvement of leaders in corruption and bribe; hence, leads to leadership crisis at grass-root level
- c. Compromise of political leaders and elite on democratic values creates uncertainty and chaos; ultimately no rule of law at real grounds
- d. Corruption of the elite can lead to economic instability and the laymen also indulge himself in corruption by looking upto elite

e. Religious scholars promotes intolerance and violence, and the common man blindly follow them; hence, it deteriorates the peace of the society

f. In educational institutions the higher authorities practice nepotism and the sub-ordinates consider it a right thing and follow suit

3. Way Forward

a. Accountability of the top-brass/elite will help to improve the system

b. Awareness programmes at the grass-root level to eradicate corruption

c. Media should play its role optimistically to bring corruption cases of such accused in public

d. Awareness programmes about the significance of democracy should conduct to curb the leadership crisis

4. Conclusion

The above discussion epitomizes fairly that to make any organization transparent, free from bribes and malpractices it is necessary to hold the elite or top-brass accountable.