

English Essay

Topic : Who has benefited more from globalization : developed or developing countries?

Outline :

1) Introduction

Thesis Statement : Globalization has provided equal opportunities to both developed and developing states. But as developed states industries have large capacity to produce goods in huge amounts; so, developed countries have benefited more from globalization as compare to developing countries. Developed countries got an opportunity through globalization to sell their goods in large amount in global markets and to dominate the global market.

2) Globalization more benefits for developed or for developing countries.

3) Developed Countries have Benefited more from Globalization.

a. Availability of large markets for developed countries to sell their products.

b. Developed states easily access to the cheap raw material of undeveloped states.

c. Availability of cheap labours for developed states.

d. Increase in the size of economy of developed countries day by day.

e. Developed countries dominance over global markets.

4) Globalization has benefited more developing countries.

a. Opportunity of large markets for developing countries as well to sell their products.

b. Access of developing states to the more advanced and finished goods for their needs.

c. Job opportunities for the citizens of developing countries.

d. Equal opportunities for both developed and developing countries to increase the size of their economies.

e. Developing states influence is also increasing in the global market as their local markets are developing.

5) Developed countries have benefited more from globalization than developing countries.

a. Developing states mostly have no products to sell in the large global markets.

b. Developed states bought cheap raw material and sells back expensive final goods.

c. Developed countries are doing exploitation of labours.

d. Global markets are more favorable for developed countries to grow their economy size.

e. Demand and supply chain of the global markets are controlled by developed countries.

b) Conclusion

Essay

History of human beings have seen different ages; stone age, iron age and the ages of different civilizations. During stone and iron ages humans were unaware of people living on other parts of the earth. But during civilization ages humans slowly and gradually started developing and started discovering the other parts of the world. Then industrialization era came and people started interacting with each other and after that the technology age came which converted the whole globe into small village. Era of globalization brought more interaction and connectedness among people so as among the markets of the countries. Globalization has provided equal opportunities to both developed and developing states. But as developed states industries have large capacity to produce goods in huge amounts, so, developed countries have benefited more from globalization as compare to developing countries. Developed countries get an opportunity through globalization to sell their goods in large amount in global markets and to dominate the global market. Developed countries through globalization got easily access to the cheap raw material and cheap labour of the developing states. In return developing states got an access to the advanced finished goods of the developed countries and the citizens of the developing states got different job opportunities. Though the developed states are providing livelihood to the citizens of the developing states but they are exploiting their skills. The economy of the developed states are increasing day by day while the dependency of the developing countries on the developed world is also increasing day by day. As a result, developed countries started controlling the demand and supply chain of the global market and are become the global economic hegemon of the globe.