VIII Conclusion

Gender equality, also known as sex equality, implies that men and women should receive equal treatment, unless there is a sound biological reason for different treatment. This concept of gender equality is an embodiment of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which lays down emphasis on providing equality in law and equality in social institutions, specifically in democratic activities and securing equal pay for equal work. Without gender equality, a society can not reach the peak of development, because according to some estimate half of the world population consists of women; how one can deny its importance. A gender equal society would be one where the word "gender" does not exist, where everyone can be themselves. Gender disparities exist since the dawn of history. From early hunter gather society patriarchy dominates the society in which women voices ~~does~~ <sup>did</sup> not hear. To stand for women rights different movements have been witnessed by the society. First ~~movement~~ <sup>wave</sup> for gender equality was started which slogan was political participation of women. Second wave, demand for economic rights of the women. In third wave feminist raised the objectification of women in different advertisement. With these gender main focus was equal access to education for <sup>all</sup> genders; elimination of gender <sup>stereotypes</sup> in all <sup>field</sup> ~~kind~~ of life and avoidance of gender base curriculum that equally promote and enhances development of all genders in the society. Additionally, ~~area~~ economic empowerment ~~is~~ was another important area of feminist concerned. They raised voices for equal pay for equal work, exploring new opportunities and provision of workplace ~~opport~~ opportunities and leadership role in economic sphere of life. Moreover, health care is another major area of interest of the gender equality. for this, they demanded access to healthcare and family planning, addressing maternal mortality and gender based violence and right to abortion by women with their own consent. Not only health, but also Political participation of women remain focus of gender equality. they want representation, promotion and provision of quota to women in politics to protect their interest through legislation. with all these opportunities gender is not free from challenges which include; cultural norms and stereotyping; lack of equal opportunities in education and politics. Further, legal and institutional gender discrimination and the most important is absence of law implementation on gender. Despite all these challenges progress have been made. In world many countries and region achieved gender equality to some extent. Greater women participation of women in education, economic and healthcare and politics is visible in different quarter of the world. Additionally, one can not deny the impacts of women participation in different field of life in modern technological world. further, more, slogans rise which enhance gender equality. in short, the ongoing initiatives at international and national level further increases the chances of gender equality. most importantly, the raising awareness, provision of ~~etc~~ educational right and technological development enhances the greater chances of gender equality.
