Title: Effects of Climate on Human Behaviour

In contrast to warm weather of tropics, mild cold of temperate countries offers benefit of leading active life. By acting as an obstacle, cold climate triggers wells of energy in man. Whereas an insurmountable impediment numbs one's energies, no hurdle at all leads to a lazy individual.

So is the case with weather changes: in warm climates, one is amply supplied with safe shelter of cool shade and generous nourishment. However, in moderate cold is healthy. In it, man lives an exerting life instead of being numbed or turned into a couch-potato. He has to provide for warmth and plenty of nourishment to ~~refill~~ refill 'energy'. The author invites to recognize according difference in human behaviour as changing seasons cycle round the year.
