

Title:

Importance of love and affection in Education

Modern education theorists give more importance to non-interference rather than the advantage of enjoyment with children. Love for children results in acceptance of advices and restrictions without any objection. It will be useless to consider teaching, as social interaction or a means to build opinion among children.

The necessary interest should involve happiness without any specific purpose. It is difficult for the over-burdened teachers to have affection for children. It is thought that education should not be a whole profession. It should be a two hours interaction because the young generation fatigues early which leads to imitation and frustration. Friendliness doesn't require self control only. The impulse helps to tackle the naughty children. ~~instead~~ instead of making rules in advance because acceptance of decision occurs in the presence of love. Rules can't replace affection and love.