

Title:- War is a Cause of breakdown of civilizations.

The writer has analyzed that war is the reason of breakdown of civilizations. War appears in a deceptive way until it forms an ineluctable grip upon lives of its addicts. In rise of civilization, benefits of war winning were seemed to be more than cost. So, states were more inclined towards war. Severity of war is hidden till society has suffered exploitation (due to) in pursuit of their desires. But when this happens, the war creator have ~~person~~ engulfed huge share of wellbeing from society and war has become inevitable cancer for society. Some efforts have been taken to preserve society but those attempts have tended to alternative directions.

Deliberance can be achieved through raising moral sense in individuals. But, individual can pursue their desires by refusing his state to be part of war or to ~~be~~ act as citizens of state.

On contrary to this, governments can combine to resist this hostility but it could be ^{slow and} steady solution to the issue. Still, better solution is more optimistic ~~per~~ according to the writer as ~~proven~~ experienced.

It is common perception that laws of a country and freedom of individual are inversely proportional to each other. Apparently it seems true.

Every law imposes restrictions on citizens. If laws in country are great in number then collective restrictions are also more. More restrictions taps individual freedom under its burden.

On contrary to this, if there are less number of laws then scope of freedom is broad for citizens.
