Introduction:

Every decision has consequences. So, taking a decision become most difficult thing. For a country whose population is more than 220 million, taking a decision is matter of life and death. Pakistan is at a turn where it has to decide between Charter of Democracy or Charter of Economy. Choosing between the two is perplexing as it will decide the fate of 220 million lives socio-economic status. The proponents of Charter of Democracy argue that Politics is main concern for the country if it get healthy, the rest of issues will be easy solved. They opines that with political stability economy stability is interlined and economy will be strengthened. Political stability will give space for FDI, development of institution capacity building, pursuance pursuit of consistent foreign policy, women integration into workforce. However, Proponents of Charter of Economy have different approach to attain stability in the country. They believe that Economy ^{the} economy is most pressing issue of Pakistan. They argue to proponent of COD that economic ^{no} economy will compel politicians for ^{economic} regulatory approach and political thaw is possible through COE. Influx of FDI will increase when country is ready for economic development. The COE will save the country from default, integrate the nation, formation of liberal policies ^{as} world order is. While COE is solution to Pakistan economy but it does not address Pakistan's political ~~some~~ problems. As COE can compel politicians on board, but can not solve issues unless political will is made through charter of Democracy. Charter of Democracy is prerequisite for governments to follow consistently. As COE uphold that national integration will be attained but interprovincial politics will not allow it to happen. COD can bring women ^{equal} proportion in workforce. As Politics and economics are interlinked with each. However politics play more active role to set the direction of a country. When political will is created, the economy, and other government affairs get set in order. So, Pakistan needs Charter of Democracy the most than Charter of Economy. (~300 words).

Conclusion:

Conclusively one may say that every coin has two faces and COD and COE are these two faces for Pakistan's issues. At this same time Pakistan needs COD the most because Pakistan's issues are mainly political. If they are solved, then other issues will be resolved easily. COD will ensure national integration, political instability, economic restructuring for betterment, national security, women participation in workforce, ^{and} institution building in the country. One may argue that COE has potential to address Pakistan issues. Pakistan's all issues are originating from fragile ^{no} economy, so it is necessary to bring Charter of Economy. The proponent of COE may say that economy is bull's eye. Thus hitting it ~~can~~ will bring national integration, national security, political stability, greater number of women in workforce, and institutional building to the country. The argument of proponents are valid but ^{not} in totality. First of all to bring COE the prerequisite is political consensus, for economic integration in the country.

the provinces will go to intra-provincial politics, there is tussle between civil and military camps for to dominate policy ~~and~~ making, and decision making, ultra-conservative opposition ~~is~~ against women for participation in work force. The political stability is key to deal with all these problems. COE ~~can~~ ^{not} do this but COD has potential to bring political stability which will lead ^{Pakistan} towards roads of prosperity. By introducing the charter of Democracy Pakistan ~~must~~ would be on the track and one day will be counted as ^{the} most prosper and economically strong ^{nation} in the world.
