

Title :- Effects of Climate on Human Activity

The moderate temperature in northern Europe acts as a stimulator for the people; they actively work for the procurement of provisions. On the contrary, the extreme weather in the tropics makes people dull and lethargic. Easy procurement of provisions further lowers their resolve to act. Just like the people living in these temperature zones, the humans in general are directly affected by yearly fluctuations in their regional weather. They tend to be lazy in extreme weather and become relatively active as the temperature gets moderate.

Word Count : 85