

2009

Title: Art: The Reflection of Reality

Philosophers are of the view that art instigates one's emotions. Plato is of the view that art nurtures one's emotions and on the other hand Tolstoy believe that art corrupts them. Tolstoy ignores an important aspect of art that it is a mean through which which one can explore different states of human nature. According to Wordsworth's definition, art is the recollection of emotions in peace. This definition denotes art as an attribute of past but actually it belongs to present. Art is the reflection of reality. It does not corrupts one's emotion rather help one to understand their true nature. All artists agrees with Shakespeare's point that art is a mean to understand the reality.

Total words: 398

Summarized: 115