Title

Precis '2023'

The author highlights three prevalent perspective on freedom in education. The first party believed that children should be completely free, regardless of their behaviour. The second party believed that children should be completely subjected to the authority, regardless of children's behaviour. The third party believed that children should be completely free, expecting moral perfection which is not supported by observation.

this sentence is unclear in meaning

He argued that education, from a social perspective, should provide opportunities for growth and development, which cannot be achieved solely by children on their own.

the author

He disagrees with the third group, which is too individualistic and neglects the importance of knowledge.
