

Snap checking in Pakistan

Snapchecking has become ^a a headache for the ^{citizen} citizenry of Pakistan. Snapchecking, actually, refers to ^{stopping} stopping someone and ^{searching} searching him for any illegal items. This is done by police and law enforcement agencies. Although it is permissible by law, as ^A article 125 of ^P police ^O order 2002 permits police to have frisk operations, it has caused hatred for police among the masses. There are many ^{derogatory} rationales behind this, some of which include ^{derogatory} derogate behaviour of police and ^{often} unreasonable checking. Most ^{often} often people are checked without reason in a vexatious manner. For instance, ~~such~~ people are checked on every checkpoint in ^{ill-mannered} a ^{ill-mannered} ill-mannered behaviour. If someone is cleared on one or two checkpoints, there is no need of further exploration. All such unreasonable snapcheckings have resulted in huge hatred for police. Hence, unreasonable snap checking is the major grievance of common people while living in the country.
