

Original Paragraph

From the moment we are born, we cannot live alone; we stand in continual need of assistance of all around us, for body and soul and spirit; we need clothes which other men make; houses, which other men build, food, which other men produce; we have to get our livelihood by working for others, while others get their livelihood in return by working for us. As children we need our parents to be our comforters, and to take care of others; we cannot exist a day without our fellowmen; we require teachers to educate us; books and masters to teach our trade; and when we have learned it and settled ourselves in life we require laws
