

human nature in the tropics and in temperate climates. In hot weather we are generally languid and inclined to take life easily; but when the cold season comes, we find that we are more inclined to vigorous exertion of our minds and bodies.

Q. 3. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow:

(20)

The third great defect of our civilization is that it does not know what to do with its knowledge. Science has given us powers fit for the gods, yet we use them like small children. For example, we do not know how to manage our machines. Machines were made to be man's servants; yet he has grown so dependent on them that they are in a fair way to become his master. Already most men spend most of their lives looking after and waiting upon machines. And the machines are very stern masters. They must be fed with coal, and given petrol to drink, and oil to wash with, and they must be kept at the right temperature. And if they do not get their meals when they expect them, they grow sulky and refuse to work, or burst with rage, and blow up, and spread ruin and destruction all around them. So we have to wait upon them very attentively and do all that we can to keep them in a good temper. Already we find it difficult either to work or play without the machines, and a time may come when they will rule us altogether, just as we rule the animals.

And this brings me to the point at which I asked, "What do we do with all the time which the machines have saved for us, and the new energy they have given us?" On the whole, it must be admitted, we do very little. For the most part we use our time and energy to make more and better machines; but more and better machines will only give us still more time and still more energy, and what are we to do with them? The answer, I think, is that we should try to become more civilized. For the machines themselves, and the power which the machines have given us, are not civilization but aids to civilization. But you will remember that we agreed at the beginning that being civilized meant making and linking beautiful things. Thinking freely, and living rightly and maintaining justice equally between man and man. Man has a better chance today to do these things than he ever had before; he has more time, more energy, less to fear and less to fight against. If he will give his time and energy which his machines have won for him to making more beautiful things, to finding out more and more about the universe, to removing the causes of quarrels between nations, to discovering how to prevent poverty, then I think our civilization would undoubtedly be the greater, as it would be the most lasting that there has ever been.

- Questions:
1. Instead of making machines our servants the author says they have become our masters. In what sense has this come about? (4)
 2. The use of machines has brought us more leisure and more energy. But the author says that this has been a curse rather than a blessing. Why? (4)
 3. What exactly is the meaning of 'civilization'? Do you agree with the author's views? (4)
 4. 'Making more beautiful things' – what does this expression mean? Make a list of the beautiful things that you would like to make and how you would make them. (4)
 5. Mention some plans you may have to prevent poverty in the world. Who would receive your most particular attention, and why? (4)

CSS - 2018

- 1- Machines have become our masters, instead of ~~and~~ becoming man's servants because we are totally dependent on them. We don't know how to tackle them. So, they made us servants.
- 2- The use of machines has brought us more leisure and more energy but we are not utilizing this time and energy properly. We are busy in making more and better machines, but we should utilize this time in some other productive activity like being civilized.
- 3- Civilization is a process of progressive development in culture, norms, language, ethics and moral values. I agree with the author's view that being civilized meant making and linking new and beautiful things. Social, moral, intellectual development is often regarded as being civilized.
- 4- Making more beautiful things mean making yourself more civilized by living rightly and thinking by independent thinking. It can be done through gender equality, maintaining justice and eradicating poverty. It can also be achieved by creating harmony among the nations.
- 5- By utilizing machines in a proper way, we can prevent the poverty in the world. This is the most useful way to eradicate the poverty. Machine save our time and energy, utilize this time and energy for some other productive

____ / ____ / 202

Day _____

ways which would be helpful to deal with poverty