

Title: Organizations objectives: Mankind Needs

The objectives of organizations should be aligned with the needs of human beings. Understanding and finding out the needs of human beings is, therefore, necessary in this regard. Organizations are founded to produce and share services. Their success depends on the suitability of steps taken towards the achievement of their objectives. In the pre-Industrialization era, organizations used to have limited objectives and simplex management hierarchy. Nevertheless, the advancement in technology has led to the diversification of objectives and expansion of management hierarchy of organizations. The efforts made for the achievement of these diverse objectives add to the efficacy of organizations. Subjectively, the efficacy of organizations is their capability to cater to the needs of human beings and the cumulative benefits they produce and offer.

Number of words:

In the passage = 339

In the precis = 120