

Argumentative

START FORM HERE

Democracy: A culture or a process?

Outline

1- Introduction

Thesis statement = Democracy, no doubt, has become a process, rather than a culture. But, some critiques believe in its culture; however, the provided evidences are insufficient. This shows that democracy is a process.

2- Democratic form of the government: An overview

3- Democracy is a process (Thesis)

- Free and fair election is an essence of democracy
- Democracy has always promoted freedom of speech
- Rule of law is a supreme authority under a democratic government
- Accountability and transparency are main democratic processes
- Democratic process promotes inclusive governance

4- Democracy is a culture rather than a process (Anti-thesis)

- Delaying election process has become a culture of democracy
- Containment of freedom of speech is a common culture in democracy
- Violation of rule of law through politicking has become a culture
- Lack of accountability and transparency have become democratic culture
- Democratic culture has become exclusive governance

5- Democracy is definitely a process (Synthesis)

- a) The constitutional norms ensure fair election process on the time
- b) According to the constitution, freedom of speech is a tool of democracy
- c) Democracy balances equality without discrimination to ensure supremacy of rule of law
- d) Judicial discretionary powers are guardian of democratic accountability and transparency
- e) Democracy always leads to inclusive governance, rather than exclusive governance

6- Conclusion

Paragraph

Free and fair election is an essence of democracy

No doubt, democracy is a process for which a chief argument is free and fair election as an essence of democracy. In fact, free and fair election process conducted on the time prevails democratic government. Every democratic based government ensures election process to enhance democracy. According to the constitution of 1973 of Pakistan "Election process should be conducted within 90 days of the dissolution of Assembly" (Article 224(2) of the constitution of 1973). This is beyond any doubt that free and fair election process is an essence of democracy.