

HOW TEACHERS SHOULD DEAL CHILDREN

The author opines that today's educationists focus more on the cons of involving with children rather than its pros. However, if the children are dealt with affection, they do listen to the advice and act accordingly. Educating them solely for the aim of nurturing future ^{responsible} citizens will not bag their attention. On the contrary, the one who enjoys their company can achieve this very goal without force. But those who are over occupied can not ultimately develop this liking, therefore the author believes in a limited hours teaching profession. Moreover, a young teacher, irritated by the societal pressure, can not keep this teacher-children liking intact. all on his own. Yet, those who do so are not bothered by the norms, for they are on the right way and there is no alternate to this liking / affection.
