Title: Different climates and their impacts

A cold climate, working as a hurdle, generates energy to perform functions of life. The disappointment prevails if this hurdle is beyond human capacity. On the other hand, absence of hurdles leads towards laziness. Struggles accompanied by hope give rise to an active and fruitful operation. So, moderate climate acting as a moderate hurdle, offers positive impacts on human race. In such climate, man is trained to perform tasks which are neither impossible nor very easy. From building houses to manage clothes, fuels and food, he performs all the tough tasks. Man in tropics offers a total opposite picture to this. Life is much easier here. Similar is human nature at different
