

Gender equality is the key to unlocking sustainable development

Outline

1- Introduction

Thesis statement: Undoubtedly, gender equality is the key to unlocking sustainable development. Several evidences, including educated youth, social harmony, respect to law, etc, among other things. However, some rational steps will reduce prevailing hurdles in gender equality for sustainable development.

2- A bird's eyeriew of gender equality

3- Persistence of gender inequality around the world

- a) Threat of gender based violence in the world
- b) Unequal access to education between gender
- c) Widened gender economic participation gap
- d) Legal discrimination with respect to discriminatory laws
- e) Vulnerable health and pregnancy as reproductive violence
- f) Mounting digital illiteracy in women

4- Gender equality: A key of sustainable development

- a) Educated youth by educated mother
- b) Unity, harmony, and co-operation for sustainable society
- c) Economic rise because of women role in labour market

- d) Supremacy of law respecting freedom of women
- e) Better legislation to support women's rights
- f) Reduction in expenditure due to good health

5- Methodologies to promote gender equality for sustainable development

- a) Strengthen women protection laws
- b) Promote awareness campaign on gender equality
- c) Launch exclusive transport for women
- d) Engage women in decision making of life
- e) Establish women educational system in remote areas

6- Conclusion

Threat of gender based violence around the world

Unfortunately, women face increasing risks of gender inequality, among which threat of gender based violence is the most significant issue. Women, no doubt, face several forms of violence, including domestic, reproductive, and sexual. Moreover, illegal practices against women in the sense of early child marriage is definitely a growing threat of gender based violence. As per the latest research of the United Nation, "Approximately 30% of women in Asia, and 17% of women in the Middle East are getting early marriages" (The United Nations, 2022). This example serves as a clear demonstration of gender based violence around the world as persistence gender inequality.

Unequal access to education between gender

Additionally, unequal access to education between gender is also leading persistence to gender inequality. In fact, disparity in acquisition of education between gender is a stark reality of the world. In consequence, it results massive illiteracy regarding gender throughout the globe. "Women, unfortunately, are just approximately 30% educated as compared to 70% of men in the world." (The News, Gender Disparity, 2022)

Hence, it is a proven fact that unequal access to education between gender is a root of gender inequality.