

Globalization is acting as a catalyst for exploitation

Outline

1- Introduction

Thesis statement: Traditionally, globalization is acting as a catalyst for exploitation in developing countries.

Developing countries face increasing risks of exploitation, which include structural adjustment policies of global institutions, exploiting role of MNCs, debt dependency relations etc. However, proactive strategies will curb exploitation for equitable globalization.

2- A glance at the definition of 'globalization'

3- Current scenario of globalization as a catalyst for exploitation

- a) Structural Adjustment Policies of global institutions exploiting domestic progress
- b) Exploitation of local business by MNCs in developing countries
- c) Inter-governmental relations between strong and weak countries for debt dependency
- d) Dominance of Western technology in manipulating mindsets of the youth
- e) Cultural violence through cultural hegemony
- f) Exploiting environmental policies in developing countries

START FORM HERE

4- Implications of globalization as a catalyst for exploitation on the international community

- a) Rise of anti-global movements
- b) Widened difference between global north and global south
- c) Unprecedented political instability in country
- d) Refugee crisis threatening cultural norms
- e) Surge in extreme nationalism
- f) Violation of labour rights in developing world due to MNCs

5- Methodologies to curb exploitation led by globalization

- a) Strengthen international-governmental relations for equitable policies
- b) Advocate for fair trade agreements
- c) Frame policies to preserve domestic culture
- d) Foster local entrepreneurship and industries to prioritize domestic products

6- Conclusion