Concept of Justice by Plato.

After rejecting all the provided concepts of Justice, he proposed his own concept of Justice. He opined that Justice must be present both in individual and in society. He thought that Justice in the State existing in better and much noticeable form, he tried to put it with the help of State. According to Plato there are three constituents in human mind namely Reason, Spirit, and Appetite, which are provided by the ruler, soldier and farmer respectively. He opined that each of these three make a valuable contribution for the creation of State. Justice can be done if each group performs their
