

CSS 2005

Basically, psychoses and neuroses represent man's inability to maintain a balanced or equated polarity in conducting his life. The ego becomes exclusively or decidedly one sided. In psychoses there is a complete collapse of the ego back into the inner recesses of the personal and collective unconscious. When he is repressed toward fulfilling some life goal and where he is further unable to sublimate himself toward another goal, man regresses into goal structures not actually acceptable to himself or to the society. Strong emotional sickness of the psychotic type is like having the shadow run wild. The entire psyche regresses to archaic, animal forms of behaviours. In less severe forms of emotional sickness there may be an accentuated and overpowering use of one of the four mental functions at the expense of the other three. Either thinking, feeling, intuiting or seeing may assume such a superior role as to render the other three inoperative. The persona may become as dominant as to create a totally one-sided ego, as in some forms of neurotic behaviour. All in all, whatever the type of severity of the emotional disorder, it can be taken as a failure of the psyche to maintain a proper balance between the polarities of life. Essentially, psychoses and neuroses are an alienation of the self from its true goal of self-actualization. In this sense culture is of no consequence. Emotional disorder is not a question of being out of tune with one's culture so much as it is of being out of tune with one's self. Consequently, neurosis is more than bizarre behaviour, especially as it may be interpreted by contemporaries in the culture. This interpretation avoids the sociological question of what is a mental disorder, since the form of behaviour which is acceptable in one culture may be considered neurotic in the other culture. To Jung, the deviation from cultural norms is not the point. The inability to balance out personal polarities is. (324 words)

Title: Personal polarities and mental disorders

indent the para of precis

Psychoses and neurosis are the disorders which imbalance man's life. In psychoses, ego becomes uncontrolled and unconscious. Man delves into the goals which are not acceptable to him or the society. Psychotic disorder is like having shadow ^{rephrase} wild as man gets exceptionally aggressive. In neurotic disorder, he considers himself superior. As a result of these disorders, an imbalance is created in polarities of life. Both, psychoses and neuroses alienate man from self-actualization. Neurotic disorder is somewhat accepted in a culture but, its interpretation varies from culture to culture. ~~In Jung's words,~~ it is not the issue of deviance from cultural norms but of inability to balance one's personal polarities.

Original word
Count: 324

Word count:
110

Suggested titles:

- 1) Nature of disorders
- 2) Culture and mental disorders.

main idea is picked and discussed
over all sentence structure is fine
content is acceptable attend to pointed out mistakes rest is satisfactory