During the period of reformation, Martin Luther challenged the work of the Catholic Church. He demonstrated the importance of faith in God. He emphasized that humans cannot attain salvation solely through deeds but through faith. Similarly men can attain his true essence through faith not by satisfying his quest for demigod status.

In a quest of being demigod humans have lost their true values. In the realm of power everything is losing its significance. In a hast to get power men is losing his relations with humanity. Political leaders are detracted from their track to get power, artists are inspired by outward appearances and institutions are also losing its significance in order to get worldly fame. Moreover, education which is often considered to enlighten humanity is also lack of true knowledge. Everything is well designed to flourish the capitalist system. However, in this game of power men has also acknowledged his capabilities. He has discovered various technologies to facilitate him in work. He has discovered medicines and advanced technologies which could help him to eradicate diseases and even able him to live longer. He has stimulated various human rights campaigns to empower him. By knowing his superiority he has become super intelligent being and being able to create more intelligent machines. His superiority is being seen as a sign of power, symbol of exceptionalism and take him beyond mortal needs. But this advancements lead him towards his disaster as he has lost his true values, connections with others, empathy and compassion. The machines he has created could also threat his existence. The institutions he has created could also entrapped him in vicious cycle of power. So, they often overshadow humanity in pursuit of power. Therefore, humanity is overlooked in our being demised.
