Human rights in Pakistan:

The human rights situation in Pakistan is in a double jeopardy. From one side, it is entangled in a trap of gender discrimination. Sadly, the universal dictum - "Women rights are synonymous to human rights" - do not hold water in the contemporary Pakistani society. As a result thousands of women are subjected to inhumane activities like honour killing (Karo Kari) etc. While, the other side of the story presents a bleak situation of child labour in Pakistan. Although, Article 11(3) prohibits the working of a child in an industry below the age of 14, yet the increase in the number of under 14 children have in industrial sector has been witnessed. Thus, without considering the women rights and the children right ^{being} equivalent to human rights, the formation of an inclusive Pakistani Society is not possible.
