"Pakistan between Islam and secularism."

The founding fathers of Pakistan rallied people for its cause in the name of having a separate country, where they would have opportunity to practice their religion freely. Upon the creation of Pakistan, Islamic political, economic and constitunal system while western minded leaders wanted it to be a modern democratic state like any other western country.

The contestation was resolved in a way that the constitution was made by and large secular democratic however objective resolution, outlining superamacy of Islam was added as a preamle to it. With the passage of time due to imperfection education system Pakistan as a nation came under compelling influence of western political thoughts and resultantly now liberal class strives to make it extra Islamic. Truth of the matter is that Pakistan was meant to be an Islamic country unlike secular liberal united India, otherwise there was no need for carving a separate country." As a nation Pakistan has to set its ideological clock right.
