

Topic:

Real Development Should transform people's lives, not just economic statistics.

Outline:

① Introduction

Thesis Statement: The real development is human development which not only leads towards economic, but also political and social progress. Therefore, the major focus of every developmental agenda should be on human development, rather than on economic development.

② Defining Real Development - The Human Development.

③ Why should the focus of real development be on transforming people's lives?

- (a) Develops social awareness regarding rights - USA Civil War
- (b) Raises the spirit of fulfilling responsibilities - Taxpayers
- (c) Encourages to learn from past experiences - Japan Constitution
- (d) Ensures healthy lifestyles for better health - Green Economy
- (e) Trains the masses to tackle crises - Israel and Singapore
- (f) Promotes gender equality among masses - Women Empowerment

④ What are the consequences if focus of development is economy rather than people's lives?

- (a) Promotes ideological conflicts among nations - USSR versus US
- (b) Raises inequality among masses - Dismantle of East Pakistan
- (c) Exploits natural environment leading towards disasters
- (d) Deteriorates public health and eventually economy - Malnutrition
- (e) Becomes a bane rather than boon - Nuclear bombs in WW2
- (f) Escalates the poverty of underdeveloping states - Interest based loans

⑤ Recommendations for better human development:

- (a) Awarding incentives for improving human lives - GSP + Status
- (b) Privatizing entities for employment generation - IMF
- (c) Overcoming class differences by equal resource distribution - Caliphate Era

- (d) Keeping the industrialization away from residential areas - CPEC.
 (e) Spending on forgotten area for maximum outcome - Bangladesh exports
 (f) Educating masses should be prime focus - Prophet's Agreement

⑥ Conclusion

Essay:

During ancient times, the life of man was simple, but hard. In order to improve his lifestyle, he moved towards the industrial revolution as a result of which his life changed. However, with the passage of time, his quest for making more economic progress resulted in devastating and catastrophic events in the form of global warming, which eventually ruined his own life. All this happened because he forgot that the real development is human development which not only leads towards economic, but also political and social progress. Therefore, the major focus of every developmental agenda should be on human development rather than on economic development. The lesson is that the development which focuses more on transforming people's lives develops awareness of rights among masses as well as encourages them to fulfill their duties. Besides this, masses learn from their past experiences and train themselves to face future crises. It also promotes healthy lifestyle and gender equality among people. On the other hand, if the focus of development remains on economy, and human development is set aside, it results in many consequences. For example, it promotes ideological conflicts, raises inequality, deteriorates public health, exploits natural environment, escalates the poverty and most importantly, it becomes a bane instead of a boon. Therefore, for better human development, incentives should be granted if nations focus on improving lives. Along with this, privatisation of entities should be carried out for more employment generation. Also, overcoming class differences, keeping industrialization away from residential areas, spending on more revenue generation areas and educating the people can produce fruitful results. Before moving towards explaining the impacts of human development on social, economic and political fronts, the word 'real development' should be understood first.

The word 'real development' denotes every development which improves the lives of people on political, social or economic fronts. Basically, it is human development which comprises education, health, environment and income domains. All humans have the basic right of access to education, a clean environment for healthy life and employment for income generation. Along with these, protection against food insecurity, access to clean water, sustainable use of natural resources and global partnership for overall welfare also comes under the domain of human development. The 'Human Development Index' Reports are also been issued on yearly basis in order to comprehend the performance of various states on development indicators.