

...stances of the following passages of about 100 words each.

1. In every country people imagine that they are the best and the cleverest and the others are not so good as are not so good as they are. The Englishman thinks that he and his country are the best; the Frenchman is very proud of France and everything French. The Germans and Italians think no less of their countries and many Indians imagine that India is in many ways the greatest country in the world. This is wrong. Everybody wants to think well of himself and his country. But really there is no person who has not got some good and some bad qualities. In the same way, there is no country which is not partly good and partly bad. We must take the good wherever we find it and try to remove the bad wherever it may be. We are, of course, most concerned with our own country, India. Unfortunately, it is in a bad way today. Many of our people are poor and unhappy. They have no joy in their lives. We have to find out how we can make them happier. We have to see what is good in our ways and customs and try to keep it, and whatever is bad we have to throw away. If we find anything good in other countries, we should certainly take it.

2. There are hundreds of superstitions which survive in various parts of the world.

Adopting good and leaving bad

People in all countries consider themselves better and superior from other countries. They love their country and its language. According to author, it is incorrect. In his opinion, everyone has positives and negatives in them. They should always choose <sup>positive</sup> good and leave negatives, wherever possible. Further, the author is concerned about his country people, who are sad and thinking about ways to make them happy. He believe, one should look for good and adopt it, even when it is from other countries.
