Title: ~~The secret agenda of population growth.~~

One of the majorly neglected questions in today's ^{society today} society is the population factor. It is necessary to analyse this question on population humanitarian grounds, in terms of both quality and quantity. If there is no balance, ~~the~~ population will rise beyond control and impact stability of human population when the population ^{reaches} ~~has reached~~ ^{deliberately} ~~deliberately~~ ^{level} people will deliberately try to balance the number of births and deaths whereas the outcasts of the society will still ~~to~~ ^{stick} on with their desired patterns and hamper natural resources of nations. There will be chaos and mismanagement in society. Politicians neglect the ~~problem, even after being aware about it.~~ The military, the employers and the revolutionists have all created a personal agenda for this undue population. The religious factions term it as a right to procreate, which politicians fall behind to maintain popularity.

Hence, population control is a state responsibility.

Title: Man's source in sorrow.

Unhappiness springs from many psychological factors. Usually, it arises from some sort of deprivation in childhood. This unhealthy development leads an individual to develop a one-sided vision of life. A recent development shows man's tilt towards sorrow as an escape. His happiness lies in his drunkenness, as a temporary escape. Such people have given up hope of ever being happy. Unhappy men are always happy with their situation, the hardest task is their realization of happiness. They merely resemble fox with no tail. A certain group of people would only choose unhappiness over happiness. Unhappy men always claim history to be the source of their sorrow. Their general perception is regarding the fact that being miserable is the only way to find peace.

Title: Envy a source of unhappiness

Envy is one of the most undesirable characteristics of human nature. An envious person wishes to inflict bad luck upon every person. Other's happiness becomes his misery. The idea of depriving others of happiness makes sense to him. If envy is acted upon, it becomes dangerous. Why should a person of one profession have more advantages over another, makes no sense to an envious individual. Human nature has admiration as a counter for envy. An envious person may also become envious of someone his own profession. The question arises is of how to find happiness amidst envy? Instead of analyzing the source of envy can be a cure to it.
