

Effect of climate on human nature

Benefits of cold climate in northern Europe are clear. It increases a man's effort. Life without difficulties is easy but the will to tackle it makes one's powers active. Similarly, a man becomes effortless in harsh winter, lazy in the summer but in temperate cold climate becomes involved in burdensome work along with the harsh weather. He has to build firm houses, warm clothes and cut down trees for fire. The cruel wind compels swift movement and to revive himself he requires healthy food. Life in the tropics is different. There is less need of food, clothes, fire and firmly structured houses, and one can live under shady trees. Same is felt by oneself, life is easy in summer but difficult in winter.

Words: 350 , Précis: 117

Written: 122