Introduction

The proverbial foolish stag, seeing its reflection in a clear water, kept praising its beautiful horns while hating its lean legs. However, in the end its beautiful horns brought about its death and could not save it from hounds.

Similarly, in the present world, many countries are flourishing their economies to maintain their hegemony at the cost of climate. The neglect of climate crisis for glorification or gaining power is becoming existential threat to humans. However, there is an urgent need to address the climate crisis due to global warming, biodiversity loss, looming food and water crisis, and eutrophication. Moreover, consequences of the climate crisis are frequent change in weather patterns like catastrophic rains, floods, encroachment on coastal areas, and economic losses. Furthermore, the reason behind neglected climate crisis are the divide among developed and developing Countries, lack of mutual cooperation, awareness, insufficient funds and prioritizing national interest over global interest/climate. Similarly, failure of international bodies to implement effective policies is another major cause. Therefore, these reasons can be mitigated/tackled through mutual cooperation, awareness and proper implementation of policies. However, the climate crisis is an urgent subject because humans are running out of time to save the planet. However, global cooperation and decisive actions are required to address this crisis.
