The term 'globalization' was first coined in 1980s. It means a regular interaction between similar and diverse entities in the world. After the independence of Pakistan, the country was struggling for the stability and betterment in all aspects. With the passage of time, progress was seen in different sectors along with becoming globalized. At a steady rate, Pakistan is now heading towards globalization by participating in energy and infrastructure corridors, establishing peace in country like Afghanistan and by joining regional and international organizations to promote its integration and to solve international issues. Additionally, Pakistan is also trying to cope up with climate change issue along with other international countries. Moreover, the country is heading forward in digitization and technology, and also promoting cultural and religious globalization. However, challenges and hurdles such as terrorism, political instability, fragile economy and weak foreign policy are jeopardizing the country to become a truly globalized state. Therefore, it is need of time to take some effective and proficient steps like strengthening security system, promotion of national integration, economic stability, image building and diplomatic reforms to pave way in making Pakistan a truly globalized state.
