Who inspired you to join the Civil Services

Essay: The roots of the civil services are found in the ancient China. Civil services in the subcontinent was introduced by the British Empire during its colonial period and later on it was introduced and reformed in 1973 in Pakistan.

I belong to a rural area of Balochistan and it has been the dream of my father to educate me in the prestigious institutions. Firstly, my father inspired me about civil services by giving the examples of exemplary works of my elder cousins who were serving in bureaucracy. Since my fifth class I made a dream that I would appear in CSS exam and join the bureaucracy of Pakistan. Secondly, I was disheartened from the deteriorating health and education condition in Balochistan. ~~So~~ Therefore, I decided to improve the institutions by being part of the bureaucracy. Thirdly, I was saddened by the destruction of the agriculture sector in the country because almost 65-70% of the population depends on agriculture for their livelihood. Therefore, I planned to join civil services in order to work on the modern agricultural policy and the implementation of its framework. Fourthly, the thing which forced me to join the civil services is the prevailing injustice in every sphere of life in Pakistan because it gives birth to despotic elements in the country. Lastly, I am motivated to join the civil services because it is my own passion to pay back to my country, and in civil services my desired group is Pakistan Administrative Services (PAS) in which I will be working as a policy maker, and also as a ~~district~~ district administrator (DC) in the country. I will work on the already existing flawed policies in order to improve them or replace them with better ones. Currently, Pakistan is facing a lot of challenges internally and I will contribute for improving the institutions so that institutions can work in true spirit
