Education and Morality

In modern era, man can only protect himself by using his intelligence for the service of love. Empathy must be inculcated in the training of intelligence so that it can be helpful in fulfilling the social responsibility and survival of man. The task of teaching morality was entrusted to the clergymen but their loyalty to the rich and powerful resulted into the loss of faith. Similarly, the practical rulers are not interested in morality. Thus only educators can teach morality to human-beings. (82 words)
