

Luther's Dream Of Impartial Nation

Martin Luther King's poem in his poem 'I have a dream' expresses his desire that one day his nation develop with the belief of equality where the son of slaves and the son of owners maintain brotherhood. Justice is prevailed in Mississippi. Luther's offspring are judged by their character rather than skin tone. In Alabama, where racism was on peak, he wants to see black kids hanging out with white kids. One day. One day all the states keep aside and let the glory of God reveal. With those hope King wanted to go Africa and he believed only these steps can transform a disharmony nation into harmony which ultimately help in freedom cause.