Precis :

During the vacations, the author wanted to go to some fascinating place. So, the author along with his friend John went to Qualla Boundary, a visiting place in Cherokee. Qualla Boundary was fenced with mountains, all this was like a view of heaven. The life-style of Indians was representing their culture of 18th century. They also visited the souvenir shop. The shop-keeper named "George" became their friend. George told them that trade is not enough for the bread and butter. He further told them that to earn the livelihood the natives rely on Bingo weekends, which attract a large number of people. Bingo weeks are famous for their various types of games. Finally, they visited the museum where many hand made things were displayed.
