Title: How to deal with children.

The author is not happy with the modern educational theorist's approach of not interfering in children's life. From the author's perspective, this approach would have negative consequences. One has to deal with children in the same way as one has to deal with one's pet. This kind of ~~for~~ dealing would remove the feeling of resentment and reluctance from children's life. A good teacher is one who feels pleasure in the presence of his students, without any kind of reward. When there is an urgency, a teacher can interfere in children's freedom without causing psychological damage. According to the author, teaching is not a whole profession. Two hours a day are enough to interact with children. Discipline is also very important in children's life. If discipline is avoided, ~~teacher~~ a feeling of irritation will arouse in the teacher. However, no rules can replace the feeling of affection and ~~excess~~ love.
