Society largely determines the core values and norms that humans possess. It is because humans ^{are} consistently engaged with their surrounding and ^{with} people who share common values and aspirations.

In US Society, it is a discouraged practice to show love and affection towards a stranger's child in public.

However, the same act may be considered a gesture of kindness to a child in Pakistan. Similarly, staring at a stranger is a common practice in Pakistan. On the contrary, staring at someone for long can create trouble in US and is often accounted for harassment. Therefore, society inculcates ~~in~~ certain norms and beliefs that shape the outlook of human lives.

The paragraph discusses 2 different practices in US & Pakistan but what these do they tell us about these societies? Examples are not sufficient related or detail
