

Précis 2023

The author mentions three schools of thoughts on the questions of freedom in education. These are based on the outcomes and psychological theories of education. One school suggests that children should be completely free no matter how bad their behaviour is. Second school suggests that children should be subjected to authority regardless their good behaviour. Another school <sup>treats children more like adults</sup> ~~concentrates more on moral and ethical values of children supported by animals and babies theories.~~

The author does not agree with this school as it is too individualistic and has lack of interest in knowledge. Education should provide mental and moral growth in children which they cannot acquire on their own.
