

"A Visit To Qualla Boundary" (Precis - 2016)

The author had a hard time deciding a place for his vacation trip. His all worries were pushed to wall when he visited Qualla boundary in Oklahoma with his friend John. It was very beautiful and scenic town depicting historical civilization. They visited shops full of distinctive handicrafts and traditional items. Later on, they had a lunch with financially challenged woodcutter named George. He told them that people of Qualla do not solely rely on tourism, instead they arrange other events and festivals like "Bingo Weekends" to make their ends meet. The museum was the last stop in their stay at town, where famous artwork and some stone carves were displayed. In last, Author wished to visit more appealing places in future.
