

Precis

Topic:- Education; leading to moral development or Education; a requisite to moral growth.

Of the three main perspectives on education; the first advocates for absolute independence, the second for strict supervision, while the third believes that children should be unrestrained yet well mannered. Its proponents uphold the view that liberty breeds morality and view education as only a means to impulsive development while negating its profound vitality. However, on the contrary children cannot be expected to act virtuously without any formal guidance. Also education offers inculcates a plethora of values such as cooperation, compassion, self control and promotes scientific progress which are essential to sustaining life. Hence, besides personal development education acts as a moral compass which children cannot attain otherwise.
