Culture, in human societies, has two main aspects; an external, formal aspect and an inner, ideological aspect. The external forms of culture, social or artistic, are merely an organized expression of its inner ideological aspect, and both are an inherent component of a given social structure. They are changed or modified when this structure is changed or modified and because of this organic link they also help and influence such changes in their parent organism. Cultural Problems, therefore, cannot be studied or understood or solved in isolation from social problems, i.e. problems of political and economic relationships. The cultural problems of the underdeveloped countries, therefore, have to be understood and solved in the light of the larger perspective, in the context of underlying social problems. Very broadly speaking, these problems are primarily the problems of arrested growth; they originate primarily from long years of imperialist – Colonialist domination and the remnants of a backward outmoded social structure. This should not require much elaboration European Imperialism caught up with the countries of Asia, Africa or Latin America between the sixteenth and nineteenth centuries. Some of them were fairly developed feudal societies with ancient traditions of advanced feudal culture. Others had yet to progress beyond primitive pastoral tribalism. Social and cultural development of them all was frozen at the point of their political subjugation and remained frozen until the coming of political independence. The culture of these ancient feudal societies, in spite of much technical and intellectual excellence, was restricted to a small privileged class and rarely intermingled with the parallel unsophisticated folk culture of the general masses. Primitive tribal culture, in spite of its child like beauty, had little intellectual content. Both feudal and tribal societies living contagiously in the same homelands were constantly engaged in tribal, racial, and religious or other feuds with their tribal and feudal rivals. Colonialist – imperialist domination accentuated this dual

Title : Social and culture changes led to liberal countries

Precis: In human societies, culture has two aspects, external aspect and inner aspects. Both are an inherent component of social structure. Social structure A change in social structure affects cultural aspects. Therefore, cultural problems cannot be comprehend without understanding social problems. So, the cultural problems of underdeveloped countries have to understand in the light of underlying social problems. These problems prevented their growth. These problems originated when imperial countries started colonization of poor and underdeveloped countries. Imperial countries took advantage of their differences and ruled over them. These Underdeveloped countries were divided into feudal societies and primitive ~~tribe~~ tribal societies. Feudal societies development remained to only small privilege class and not mixed with culture of general masses. However, primitive tribal culture had a little intellectual content. Both tribal and feudal societies were living in the same homeland for many centuries but they were constantly engaged in their differences. These were the reasons which led to the newly liberated countries.
