Debate on Presidential System (200 words Paragraph)

Western political system has dominated world more and more during recent centuries. Presidential system is often a product of western political system. It originated from the United States of America. The idea of this system revolves around a single person known as President. This person is elected by following a constitutional process, and he heads the government and the state simultanesly for a particular time period. This system is antithesis of parliamentry system in which parliament acts a core body with one of them heading the house and the government also. According to political analysts, this system is better for heterogenous societies while presidential system is good for homogenous socities. Presidential system is considered strong and quick because of the reasons that removal of President from his seat requires a complicated process, and that single person decisions are usually more quick than collective decisions. Pakistan has tried and tested both the systems, but under current constitutional arrangment Parliamentry system is prevalent which enjoys greater support among democratic forces of the state.

In a nutshell, Presidential system has its pros and cons, and cannot be declared objectively right or wrong, but at places where it suits geographical and social conditions, it can lead to greater progress and prosperity.
