

Title

Structure and function of Organization

Precis

The goal of an organization must be in the interest of public. Different surveys are conducted to check the demands of market and public. The success of any organization depends upon the resources and opportunities provided by the people. These organizations provide a feasible environment and employment to the common people. In the pre-industrial era, the small business entrepreneurs were limited to mere cooperation. After the industrial revolution, hierarchy was established from top to bottom in industrial organization. The efficiency of these organizations depends upon the fulfillment of interest of people with limited cost. The management system of an organization includes coordination and achievement of goal. This system must ensure the profit of coordinator or contributor.

precis words = 133
passage words = 301